Credits: 20.0 Semester: 1

Prerequisites: AAAB at Higher or AAB at A level

To this end it focuses on some of the key developments of the twentieth century, including the growth of the nation state, and the emergence of nationalism; the evolution of the international political system from Great Power rivalry, through two world wars to the Cold War; the international economic order; the emergence of international organisations, and the collapse of the communist system in the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe.

IR1006 Comparative Political Systems and Foreign Policy Analysis

Credits: 20.0 Semester: 2

Prerequisite: IR1005 and either AAAB at Higher or AAB at A level

Description: This module introduces students to some of the main features of political systems and seeks to link these with the making of foreign policy. In the first half of the module we analyse the different types of political systems, introduce a range of concepts such as democracy, political culture, the state and power, and outline the key institutional features of modern states. The second half of the module looks at the ways in which different states make foreign policy, the different levels of analysis open to the student of foreign policy, and make extensive use of the case studies from various regions, which might include USA, Western and Eastern Europe, the former Soviet Union and the Middle East.

IR2003 Power, Violence and International Relations

Credits: 20.0 Semester: 1

Prerequisites: IR1005 or MP1003 & IR1006

Description: The module will begin with an examination of concepts of power in contemporary International Relations theory; beginning with traditional realist understandings of power and then looking at challenges to realist understandings. It will then examine the central realist concept of the balance of power and Neo-Realist refinements of it, before moving on to discussions of the causes and character of war and conflict in contemporary world politics, both military and economic, and approaches to resolution of such conflicts. Finally it will discuss the ethics of war and violence. Two regional cases will then be considered. The module will then close by discussing some of the more important arguments about the character and shape of conflict at the close of the twentieth century and the possibilities of containing, managing and/or resolving it.

IR2004 Globalization, Regimes, Governance and International Relations

Credits: 20.0 Semester: 2

Prerequisites: IR1005 or MP1003, and IR1006 and IR2003

Description: The module will begin by focussing on the character and interpretation of three central processes of contemporary international relations; economic globalization, the growing number of international and transnational regimes (both legal and informal) and, with it, the changes in the character of global legal regulation, and the increasing significance of democracy and democratization both as an aim and as a force for polarization. It then contextualizes these processes by looking at the extent to which they are occurring both in key regions of the world, specifically Europe, and in certain central issue areas, for example arms control and human rights. The module then concludes with an assessment of the character of emerging 'global governance' and assesses both opportunities and dangers in this process.
